Irish Hams in Favor with King.

Special Correspondence Washington Herald.
Dublin, Nov. 25.—Canada appears to be no longer an attractive field for Irish emigrants, though large numbers have left our shores this year. They prefer to patronize the United States. During the present week the Canadian government has closed its Irish emigration depot for want of sufficient support. The Anti-Emigration Society claims to have done much to frustrate the efforts of the Canadian agents who went about the country delivering timely lectures on the hardships of the Canadian Northwest offered Irish emigrants. It is pictured as an Eldorado until the Anti-Emigration people came along with lantern slides depicting scenes that suggested misery and hardships in their worst and most repulsive form.

A few young men, who were induced to leave Ireland and invest their little savings in Canadian agricultural development, with disastrous results, were brought back to Ireland and paraded through the country as an object lesson. Result—the collapse of the Canadian agents, who have now transferred their operations to the Glasgow office. It is somewhat significant that the resignation by Charles R. Devlin of his seat in Parliament is practically coincident with this collapse. Mr. Devlin was before his election as a member of the Irish party, the chief of the Canadian emigration station in Ireland; and John Redmond was frequently criticised for inviting an emigration agent to join his party a time when the determined efforts were being made to stay the tide of emigration.

Population Slightly Increased.

Notwithstanding the exceptionally heavy emigration this year, an increase would appear to have taken place in the population of Ireland during the September quarter. The excess of births over deaths was 9,668, and the emigrants numbered 8,820, so that the increase was nearly 1,300. It is a small balance to build hopes upon, but these quarters with the balance on the right side are beginning to be unusual. They afford some indication that the bottom is being reached in the depletion of Ireland's population, and that a time is coming when the changes will be once again on the up-grade.

Sir Thomas Lipton can no longer claim the distinction of being the only purveyor of pork and bacon in the world, as the award VII has conferred a title. Sir Thomas is, of course, a baronet, but another Irishman in the bacon business has just commenced to run him close, so that he believes Sir Thomas to be in a hurry to win The America's Cup if he means to retain his lead in the contest for titles. Alexander W. Shaw, head of the great bacon curing firm of Limerick, has recently been made a knight. It is stated that until quite recently King Edward divided his patronage equally between Shaw and Lipton for his usual breakfast "rashers," but on discovering that at a recent epicurean contest in Paris a number of French gourmets declared that Limerick ham had taken the prize, his majesty immediately transferred his entire patronage to the banks of the Shannon. This is declared to be the secret of the latest knighthood. During the recent visit of the lord mayor of London to Paris the municipal council had boldly set out on the dinner menu, "Jambon de Limerick Renaissance," which clearly indicates that Limerick ham and bacon are finding favor among people who are noted for the excellence, luxury, and variety of their dishes.

Matchmaking in Tipperary.

One of the most novel suggestions for the establishment of a new Irish industry comes from the County of Tipperary. It would appear that the marriage industry was at one time in a flourishing condition among the "stone throwers," as the Tipperary boys are humorously described, but has been, through a combination of circumstances, allowed to fall into a deplorable state of decay. The old system of matchmaking still survives among the present population, but an effort is now being made to stamp it out, and to introduce something more progressive lines, where there might be an absence of the pernicious elements that have made the system a byword among civilized communities. In Ireland it is an undeniable fact that a large number of them are negotiated in saloons, and that the question of money is a more potent factor in the transaction than the considerations of love or affection on the part of the contracting parties. It is maintained that 50 per cent of the unhappy marriages in Ireland can be traced to this vicious system, and it is many respects a survival of the slave traffic.

The basis on which the industry in its new form is to be floated, if not claiming much originality, is understood to be the system of the "stone throwers," as the Tipperary boys are humorously described, but has been, through a combination of circumstances, allowed to fall into a deplorable state of decay.
